Aloha Earlynne,

From our phone call yesterday, we will be reflecting in the EIS that HECO's planned generating capacity would be sufficient to support the transit system; however, that infrastructure improvements, including transformers and sub-stations as well as distribution lines, would be required to meet future customer needs, including those of the transit project.

As a follow-up I would like to confirm some general numbers. I received comments that the project's power demands should be shown relative to HECO's totals. Looking at HECO's IRP-3 study from last year I pulled out the following values:

2007 peak demand ~1,400 MW
2025 forecast peak demand ~1,700 MW and 10,000 GWH annual total demand.

Are these the values that I should quote, or is there something more appropriate. If you have 2030 projections, that would be ideal.

Mahalo,
Lawrence
